Not illustrated. 1856 Excerpt: .now pushed back his chair, while his wifey, as he always called her, took a large white-lipped bason out of the cupboard, and pouring into it the remainder of the water from the kettle prepared to wash the cups. I had been accustomed to do this; so I said-- If you please, ma am, I can wash the cups, if you will let me; I won t break one. So you shall then, said she in a pleasant tone, giving me the cloth; and I will sit down and see how well you do it. So I washed everything carefully, she and the old gentleman watching me all the time. When I had finished, and carried away the water and the cloth, as she told me, into the kitchen, she said that she was much pleased with me, and that I had washed the cups as well as she could have done them herself. The old gentleman then took up his hat and said to me, Now, Ellen --I had told them my name-- you must tie on your bonnet again, and we will go and look after this naughty aunt of yours. I don t know what I had been thinking about for the last hour, certainly no thought of ever returning to my wretched home had once entered my head; and his words caused me a thrill of agony which it would be impossible to describe. I threw myself down at the old man...
